

Disaster Recovery and Backup Tape Remediation

Remediating backup data to reduce cost and risk. Many organizations have difficulty identifying and preserving backup data relevant to legal and regulatory matters. In addition, skyrocketing data volumes and overlapping preservation requirements have led companies to delay remediation projects for fear of discarding data under legal hold. Over-preserving and failing to remediate backup materials may result in additional costs and risk if the data is later deemed discoverable

FTI Technology's Information Governance, Privacy & Security Team can help organizations take control of disaster recovery backups and remediate the right data. Example services include:

- Creation of defensible statistical sampling protocols to move through large amounts of media for defensible disposition
- Indexing and machine analysis of backup media to pinpoint data subject to preservation
- Defensible destruction of irrelevant media
- Updating backup technologies and processes to ensure adherence to the company's disaster recovery policies
- Development and deployment of live data preservation systems that enable faster and more cost-effective handling of e-discovery requests

With extensive experience across a variety of backup media and platforms, as well as expertise handling data in adherence to global data privacy laws, FTI Technology's Information Governance, Privacy & Security team can help update policies and remediate unnecessary data in a safe and defensible manner. Benefits can include:

- Reduced risk of losing ESI via old and damaged backup tapes
- Reduced risk of data breach by eliminating unnecessary, and vulnerable, duplicates
- Greater transparency with a complete backup tape inventory
- Lower storage costs by eliminating unnecessary duplicates
- Reduced legal review costs with fewer duplicates in the system
- The ability to safely decommission legacy backup applications
